EXPLANATORY NOTE

The relevance of the discipline follows from the necessity of possessing knowledge, skills, and abilities in the field of cross-cultural communication, caused by the development and strengthening of interstate, political, economic, and cultural ties of the Republic of Belarus with the world community.

A graduate student (major: 1-23 01 02 "Linguistic support of intercultural communication (in directions)", specialization 1-23 01 02-05 02 "Communication technologies in business") must be profoundly and fully proficient in cross-cultural communication to be able to apply knowledge in solving practical problems in the field of foreign economic relations and communication technologies in business, as well as possess academic, socio-personal, and professional competencies.

The goals of the discipline are as follows:

- systemic teaching problem aspects of cross-cultural communication, as well as mastering major concepts and terminology;
- developing cultural awareness and capability of appropriate interpretation of the communicative behavior in business sphere of various cultures.

The practical goal is to form students' cognitive skills in the field of cross-cultural communication, which includes basic knowledge in this field of science, knowledge of the terminological apparatus and the main methods of conducting research on problems related to cross-cultural communication. Intercultural and communicative competence is the ability to apply acquired knowledge in practice in cross-cultural communication. Educational and cognitive competence provides for the further development of general and special training skills; familiarization with the available methods and techniques of self-study features of cross-cultural communication in business.

During the training, a basic professional competence (BPC) should be formed, which provides for the "implementation interlingual and intercultural interaction, taking into account cultural values, norms and stereotypes of speech behavior".
